

Encouraging your child's decision making and independence

Presented by the Council for Intellectual Disability (CID)

Parents want their children to become independent adults whose needs and preferences are respected and honoured. Supported decision making is an approach that guides people with disabilities, including children, to make more of their own decisions.

Ricky and David from the Council for Intellectual Disability (CID) will explore how you can encourage your child to be who they want to be and do what they want to do through supported decision making.

This interactive session will be delivered by Ricky, who has an intellectual disability, and David from the My Rights Matter project at CID.

During this interactive session we will:

- Learn what supported decision making is and how it can benefit you and your child
- Explore how to encourage your child to make decisions and become more independent
- Engage in an open discussion with other parents
- Have an opportunity to ask questions
